Hi Bob - Thanks for keeping me "in the loop" on this. I've read the letter and I have a couple of "recommendations/suggestions" :

1. Yes, speak with the DNS lawyer to clarify the position of DNS in regards to liability (For information only)
2. Take no immediate action legal wise. Let the situation "play out" for the next 30 days or so (even though the letter demands a response by 10/15)
3. Alert/apprise the insurer for DNS to confirm coverage or lack of coverage.

I'm of the opinion (on first read) that the Motorskill warranty will be required to cover this exposure , although it may result in some limited legal exposure to DNS.

Jut a thought.

Be Blese

Hi Guy's,

As the active hands on members I have attached.

Just some FYI. I will be following up with Chris our attorney and with the other suits building I am pertly sure DNS will have to go to the "parent" company as Ryan stated "Motorskill" and push for us to end all relationships and get DNS solar stock re-purchased.

I think we could have some small liability, for the order being late (still a stretch) but more damage control than real fault.

I will be following up with Chris in a few days.

This is still highly confidential at this point.

Thanks
Bob
